

More Scientists Question Whether HIV causes AIDS | The Daily Californian.

"You cannot find the (HIV) virus, only antibodies, and it doesn't spread via sex as it should," Duesberg said. "HIV is a harmless virus. I have said that before, and I continue to say it."

"Consensus medicine tells us that HIV causes AIDS. However, the consensus is invariably proved incorrect in the ever-advancing world of science.

Peter Duesberg, professor of molecular and cell biology and one of the first scientists to isolate the cancer gene, says the consensus about AIDS is certainly wrong; as more evidence is streaming forth showing that HIV is a harmless passenger virus."

Scientists from the Gladstone Institutes have announced the HIV is not responsible for AIDS.

The staggering announcement proves what alternative doctors have said on the subject for a number of years. This new study doesn't go as far as to suggest that HIV is harmless. However, this is a step in the right direction."
