

Oris Watches For Everyone

Oris watches is probably the most ancient Swiss watch companies in the world. Oris was created by Paul Katten (right) and George Christian in the Swiss town of Hölstein. The founders obtained the recently closed Lohner & Co watch factory and signed a founding agreement from the local mayor. The name "Oris" was offered to the new firm - it was the name of the stream that flowed nearby. The increase of Oris ongoing, with a factory in Digena and a plant in Herbstsville. The company begun to equip a pocket watch with straps, steadily transforming them into a full-fledged wrist watch. Oscar Herzog's ambitious wish to enhance the quality of goods created by the company stumbled on an obstacle in association with the adoption of the so-called "Watch Industry Charter" on March 12, 1934 by the Swiss government. This original law, which guarded and controlled the entire market, specifically, banned watch organizations from introducing new technologies without particular authorization. Before this, Oris used the Roskopf pin system in its products. This move was regarded as being less accurate compared to anchor stroke utilized by some Oris competitors, who managed to implement it ahead of the adoption of the law.
