

Fun And Interactive Toys For Your Infant, Toddler, And Preschooler - Jo Ann Gramlich

It's extremely important to choose the right toys for your children. It is highly recommended that you choose toys that are not harmful or dangerous and most of all, age-appropriate. Little children can learn so many new things through play. You can select the toys that are just right for your child's skill level. Such toys should encourage intellectual stimulation and physical growth.

With so many toys available on the market, choosing the right ones can be an overwhelming task. Toys these days can be quite expensive so it is better to weigh which toys suit your little ones needs.

In the first couple of months, infants appreciate things they can look at and listen to since they're not able to grasp yet or sit up independently. Colorful patterns usually captivate them because they're easier for them to see. Also, it is at this stage infants are learning to appreciate sounds and music. It would be best to have bright colorful toys that move slowly and produce gentle and soothing sounds. Toys that are recommended at this early developmental age include crib mobiles, hand-held toys, rattles, music makers, stuffed animals, baby phones, activity cubes, five colorful ring sets, musical rhyme books, soft books, kick and play piano gym, ring-a-links, baby bouncers, music boxes, and bath time squishy animal squirt toys.
