What is Microblading Eyebrows?

Microblading is a cosmetic tattooing technique specifically designed for eyebrows. Using a handheld tool with ultra-fine needles, a trained technician creates precise, hair-like strokes by implanting pigment into the skin. The result is a realistic and fuller appearance that complements your natural brows. Unlike traditional tattoos, microblading uses pigments that fade over time, typically lasting 12 to 18 months, making it a low-commitment beauty option.

What to Expect During the Microblading Process

The procedure begins with a consultation to discuss your desired brow shape and style. The technician will map out the perfect outline using your facial structure and preferences. After applying a numbing cream for comfort, the technician uses the microblading tool to deposit pigment in fine strokes. The process typically takes about 2–3 hours, including shaping and pigment application.

Healing and Aftercare

Post-procedure care is crucial for the best results. During the first week, avoid getting your brows wet, and refrain from applying makeup or skincare products to the area. Minor redness, scabbing, and initial darkness of the brows are normal and will subside as the skin heals. A touch-up session after 4–6 weeks ensures the pigment settles evenly and your brows look perfect.
