

YouTube is one of the most widespread video platforms. Over 1.3 billion individuals use YouTube each minute. About three hundred hours of content is being uploaded on to YouTube TV by the users and creators. With YouTube's new Premium feature, there's little question that YouTube is tapping into the potential of probably changing into mainstream TV material. Roku, being one among the most versatile streaming devices of all time, conjointly has YouTube TV as a downloadable application on its Roku channel store similar to in any other store.

YouTube TV is a free application within the Roku channel (Roku.com/link) store additionally. Of course, the new addition, Roku premium, could be a priced choice. However, the users will continuously use the application at no cost, with ads.

Reason for YouTube TV not functioning on Roku

Well, here are a couple of common reasons why your YouTube app isn't operating.

1. The account settings in Roku conflict with the account you're using for your YouTube.
2. Problem with web settings
3. Update the Youtube app in your Roku (Roku.com/link)

These are the potential reasons why your YouTube TV not functioning on Roku.

1. Check the web association
2. YouTube account
3. Not updating the You tube app to the latest version

To troubleshoot this, you'll have to be compelled to update the application from the Roku channel store.

If this doesn't work, please uninstall the YouTube application from the channel list, restart the device and install the application once more.