ILM (INDIAN LEATHER MANUFACTURER) is a manufacturer of leather products. We use full-grain and top-grain leather to make our products.

The ultimate goal is to provide you with quality made products that you can be proud of. Full-grain and top-grain leather are the best materials for this type of work because they contain more natural fibers compared to other types of leather, which makes them more durable and supple with a distinctive "pull-up" effect.

Leather bag manufacturing requires strict excellent control at several phases of production. The process of making leather bags is very extensive and complex.

The whole process starts with selecting the right animal skin that should be thoroughly cured before it can be made into a leather bag. The procedure also includes selecting the right tanning agent, grading the leather, and cutting to size. The leather is then dried, embossed or dyed, depending on what kind of products are made from it. The next step is to sew together the pieces with heavy-duty commercial sewing machines. Finally, the final touch such as handles, straps or belts are attached before it can be shipped for sale to customers.

We always aim for perfection in making our products, so we take great care in selecting the right type of premium quality materials. In order to keep the natural look and feel, we mostly use vegetable-based dyes which don't require adding any harsh chemicals or toxic substances during the production process.

The process of designing and developing leather products is a meticulous, step-by-step process. From the initial design to the final cut, it takes a lot of careful planning and preparation to produce an exemplary product.
