MJ Printing

MJ printers use UV light to cure and sculpt the resin in a layer-wise fashion. The print heads are similar to those in standard inkjet printers and dispense droplets of thermoset photopolymer resin that solidify under the UV light, building the part layer by layer.

The resins used in MJ are available in a wide range of materials including flexible, castable and transparent, as well as materials optimized for specific industries. This versatility makes MJ ideal for visual prototypes and end-use parts.

Parts made by MJ have an extremely smooth surface finish and can compete with injection-molded parts in terms of aesthetics. However, the high cost of materials and printing time limits this technology to professional applications.
