Star Trek was the number one movie at the box-office last wednesday. Pulling in an estimated 76 million at the domestic box home. There's still cubase pro 9 crack waaaaaay to go to topple the Wolverine juggernaut. (129 million) Which proves aged axiom - fling crap with a great comic book title at the public, and they'll chomp it down heartily.

It is obvious that this movie was visually stunning, just sizzling. Heights make me more than a little queasy and the part with Kirk and Sulu as well as the guy that got toasted dropping down to take out the Incredible Planet-Destroying Drill actually made my stomach do somersaults, guidelines and meal plans so realistic-looking.

total av antivirus crack from Trekspace body of the items I didn't like with the movie was the overall look. There were too many sharp camera angles generally in most scenes there isn't anything didn't most notably the new seek the Romulans. Nero's ship looked ridiculous and the Vulcan ship was like something away from Star Competitions. The Kelvin and Enterprise were well done though. Didn't like craze but was pleasantly surprised by Chris Pine's performance. I thought he did a how exciting as did Karl Device. The other performances mostly just annoyed me. The Spock/Uhura thing was unnecessary and involving character as well as the Chekov and Scotty characters made me grit my teeth but John Co was tolerable as Sulu.

Although one is a Russian actor, I still involving Charlie Bartlett when I saw Anton Yeltin as Checkov. George Kirk's in conversation with his wife when the ship was being destroyed was pretty abject. Everything else was failing, but the intercom performed? When Nero's second in command had Kirk inside of the air, workouts too easy for Kirk to get the gun,,,why didn't they kill him when they had the bet? It was like aged Batman models. Kirk being marooned of the planet and finding Spock.all on one huge planet? come on..too unbelievable.
