Mustard Patiala Pant: For A Quite Popular Traditional Outfits

Mustard or dark yellow was for years considered as a dull colour, until it was chosen as a prime shade by designers across the world for their spring-summer collections. Since then, this shade has picked up tremendously in the fashion world. In India, as the Indian textile industry goes global, Indian brands and designers have been experimenting with the colour palette. Mustard yellow, however, has since long been used by Indian weavers and handloom industries for making sarees, patiala pants etc. These are quite popular traditional outfits in many parts of the state and are usually worn for festivals and religious ceremonies. They are also popular with brides for their Mehendi and Haldi ceremonies.
