As soon as onboard their ship, Daenerys watches as Davos as well as Gendry strip a badly hypothermic Jon out of his wet garments as well as sees the scars Jon still has from his murder. As evening falls, an exhausted Gendry manages to make it back to Eastwatch and informs Davos to send out the raven. Realizing that they're in trouble, Jon orders Gendry to run back to Eastwatch and also send a raven to Daenerys.

That night, Jaqen himself checks Arya by having her recount the tale of just how she involved the House of Monochrome. Cersei wishes to move against the Boltons to punish them for their treason, however Littlefinger encourages her that it would be better to wait on Stannis to march on Winterfell and afterwards let the Knights of the Vale tidy up the mess that is left. He then proceeds to expose that Sansa is alive as well as readied to wed Ramsay at Winterfell-- although he doesn't discuss his function in her escape or engagement.

Later on, the very same old female that invited Sansa to Winterfell informs her that if she's ever in trouble, all she has to do is light a candle light in the greatest window of the busted tower and aid will certainly come. A little bit additional southern, Sansa pays a browse through to the Winterfell crypts, where she discovers the feather that Robert Baratheon placed on the effigy of her Auntie Lyanna in Game of Thrones' extremely first episode. After sailing away from Volantis, Jorah reveals to Tyrion that he is taking him to Daenerys, not Cersei.
