An overview of Canada's immigration plans.

New immigration levels plans are announced each year by Immigration, Refugees, and Citizenship Canada (IRCC). Canada plans to welcome the following number of new arrivals between 2022 and 2024:

- 2022: 431,645 permanent residents
- 2023: 447,055 permanent residents
- 2024: 451,000 permanent residents

How Immigrants are Important to Canada's Future

Canada encourages immigration as a means of bolstering its economy. In addition to having one of the world's oldest populations, Canada also has one of the lowest birth rates in the world. This mismatch harms both the economy and the government's finances. Canada has been boosting immigration levels since the late 1980s to increase the nation's economy, population, and labor force to overcome the challenges imposed by a lower birth rate and an aging population. Canada's population and economy are heavily reliant on immigration today. Become a global citizen by living and working overseas! ## Implications for International Students

For international students who want to move to Canada permanently, Canada's new Immigration Levels Plan is excellent news. A post-graduation employment visa may be available to international students studying in Canada after completing their studies (PGWP).

Even though PGWP holders can stay in Canada to work temporarily, it does not guarantee that they will be granted permanent status. Canadian immigration is the only option for overseas students who want to stay in the country for the long term. Express Entry is one option, but the Provincial Nominee Program may also be an option (PNP). The Immigration Levels Plan's large numbers indicate that overseas students have a better chance of obtaining permanent residency through these multiple avenues.
