

Why did Ron Miscavige leave Scientology?

On a March day in 2012, Ron Miscavige out of the blue left Golden Era Productions where he was working as a trumpet player in the Church of Scientology's band without a single word to his co-workers or band mates. These were the very people he had worked with for nearly thirty years. Not a phone call, a letter or even a single goodbye to any of them before or since.

Four years later to make a buck off the name and accomplishments of his son, Ron concocted a tale and all of a sudden his Sunday afternoon drive became the "Great Escape," made all the more absurd by the fact that the car he drove off in was gifted to him by his son. The truth is he drove through the gate he'd passed through every day for years down the State Highway he'd traveled thousands of times.

See what really happened and the real "drama" that transpired. Retrace the exact route Ron took, drive out the same gate he did and turn onto the same State Highway. See what Golden Era Productions looks like on a Sunday morning like the day Ron and his wife drove away, with not a single person in "hot pursuit." In fact, nobody even noticed he had left until Monday—a full day later.

Watch the reenactment of Ron Miscavige's "Great Escape."

<https://www.ronmiscavigebook.com/videos/ron-miscaviges-great-escape.html#read-more>