

SOME FALSE MYTHOLOGY ON PLASTIC SURGERY

Facial plastic surgery, like many other medical operations, appears to have developed mythology. These erroneous 'statements' become 'facts,' which may dissuade people from proceeding with a procedure. Some of the most frequent are dealt with here at OCSC, the home of the best plastic surgeons in Bhubaneswar.

- Facial plastic surgery is merely a vanity project – sure, there's nothing wrong with wanting to feel better about your appearance, but the majority of facial plastic surgery treatments target regions that are regarded undesirable. Yes, this can help with self-esteem building, and there's nothing wrong with it.
- These treatments will always make me feel better — no reputable plastic surgeon would ever recommend completing procedures as a "cure" for emotional or psychological issues.
- With my 'new' face, no one will recognize me. Plastic surgery does not alter one's essence; however, it can help with deformities and age-related symptoms such as wrinkles and excess neck skin. We always tell our patients, good plastic surgery is plastic surgery that no one knows about. No one will realize you had work done if treatments appear natural, but you will simply look better - like the greatest version of yourself.
- Deep face scars can be removed with facial plastic surgery, although they are unlikely to disappear completely. Surgery can help by eliminating indentations and making them less noticeable.
- No, plastic surgery does not work for everyone. Patients must be willing to suffer short-term adverse effects like swelling and discomfort. It is critical to speak with a reputable professional and follow their recommendations, as well as to be realistic about what can be accomplished.

After debunking some common misconceptions, the conclusion is clear: facial plastic surgery is a technique worth considering, and speaking with an experienced practitioner is the best course of action.
