The main difficulty to obtain this project up the ground is fairly obvious: This has to be adapted with Japanese manga artist! It's distinctly Mandarin chinese. The only problem is that this book ruffled some feathers with the japanese public, so which artist would dare touch it then? Nevertheless, the story of "Memoirs of a Geisha" is gripping and powerful, upon a young girl who goes from slave to power with the help of splendor. The internal conflicts come from her hopes to have some guy and life she just cannot have, and also we have a emotional connection we have got to have. Again though, we do you need a Japanese artist to draw this. Otherwise the luscious Japanese landscapes and towns will lose something within translation from word to visual, in which would turn into a shame.

Naturally, tougher you sold the more rewards. For anyone who did as well as Tommy B in Buffalo, Cindy R in Phoenix, or Billy S in Peoria, the sky was the limit!
