Market Overview:

By 2022, the global construction market is expected to grow by an average of 3-4 percent, with LATAM and APAC accounting for more than 55 percent, or half of global construction production. The enormous expansion of the construction sector in emerging nations such as India, China, Vietnam, Australia, and Indonesia is an important trend in the global construction industry. Currently valued at USD 210 billion, the African construction industry is predicted to grow to USD 260-300 billion by 2022. The construction market in the United Kingdom will face a number of issues, including Brexit pressure, weak order book growth, and rising input costs.

India and China are predicted to contribute the most to construction in Asia, totaling USD 55 trillion by 2030.
