

What purpose do independent schools in Sydney serve?

Introduction

Schools are a place where children get educated to make a bright future for themselves. In Australia, there are two types of schools: government-funded schools and independent schools. Government-funded schools are those that are funded by the government and their syllabus is set by the government. Independent schools are not funded by the government and their syllabus is also not set by the government. These schools are independently managed and run by some organizations which do not have any government members in an official capacity. Independence schools are located in different parts of Australia and there are more than one of them in the country.

The makeup of independent schools

Independent schools have been in existence since Australia became a nation. There are independent schools of all types in Australia like schools that are religiously affiliated and those that are not affiliated to churches. Independent schools do not report to the government for day-to-day management or setting the syllabus. Independent schools fund and maintain their resources independently from government control. There is often a trust or board of management who are responsible for the overall management and setting up syllabus of the schools. The schools still comply with the broader government regulations regarding schools that have to operate in Australia.

The benefits of independent schools

Independent schools are well-funded and staffed so that children studying in these schools are never short of resources. Pastors and teachers take care of all the children individually, maintaining and molding them so that they become well-rounded responsible citizens when they graduate from the school. Some parents want to make their children get religious education so independent schools also offer such a type of moral and ethical education to children. Education in academic subjects and participation in extracurricular activities is mandated for every child enrolled in these schools.

Conclusion

Independent schools are one of those that are being called a necessity in the overall education system of Australia. These schools fill the void where some schools are needed to impart lessons in subjects and areas where Government schools may not be doing so or may be lagging. Theological education in ethics and morals is also not imparted by government-funded schools so this is an area where the independent schools fill the void. Making children enroll in independent schools in Sydney is a decision that individual parents take based on their decision-making powers.
