

What type of Denture Is Perfect For You?

Losing teeth is something nobody anticipates. Before you get discouraged about settling for the massive, bulky, uncomfortable false teeth your grandparents had, it is very important realize nowadays there are different models of options to choose from. Unlike the times of old where everyone got exactly the same kind, patients are now able to get dentures that best fit their special, dental needs.

Types of Dentures:

Complete - Complete dentures would be the conventional dentures that are applied all things considered in the patient's teeth are removed. Complete dentures add a full pair of teeth that stuck to the gums.

There's 2 forms of complete dentures: Conventional and immediate. Conventional are applied following your teeth are extracted and the gums heal (around 8-12 weeks). Immediate are pre-made and can be applied within the gums soon after the teeth are extracted, in the gum healing process.

Partial - Unlike complete dentures, partial dentures do not require every one of the patient's teeth to become extracted. Partial dentures are dental bridges that attach replacement teeth into a base that is either pink or gum colored that is connected by wired frames.

There's 2 varieties of partial dentures: removable and permanent. In removal partial option, the bridge snaps either to the base or on top of the wire framework. In permanent partial option, the bottom of the bridge is cemented into place into the gums.

Alternatives

Today, dentures are not your only option. As an alternative to dreading the unnatural look or uncomfortable feel. There exists another alternative accessible that give you a natural appear and feel.

This alternative are dental implants. Tooth implants are permanent solutions for missing teeth. Implants are constructed with a titanium screw inserted to the gums and topped having a porcelain crown. The crowns are sized and colored to the specific size, shape and color of the patients natural teeth. The screw keeps the crown available so an individual can avoid the awkward slipping that occurs with dentures along with the daily cleaning that they can require.

Which Denture is Right For You?

The top alternative that's best for your needs is determined by the health of your teeth. For those who have no or almost no healthy, natural teeth left, complete dentures are your best option.

Partial and teeth implants require patients to possess a few, strong, healthy natural teeth to become inserted.

Permanent partial dentures and tooth implants are perfect for patients with few missing teeth and who don't want the irritation of taking care of removable partial dentures.

The two permanent partial dentures and dental implants will be the most costly denture options. These options may not be best for those found on a good budget.

Conventional and removal partial dentures require daily cleaning and cannot be worn overnight. There are also some foods in order to avoid while wearing either of these denture options, including chewy, sticky, hard and crunchy foods.

Traditional dentures are not the possibility for patients with missing teeth. You can find complete and partial dentures as well as dental implant denture alternatives. Some false teeth can also be permanent, meaning they're easier for patients to clean and does not cause embarrassing slippage when eating food.
