Dan Mark and I have been friends for almost 20 years. In the course of our friendship, he has often expressed his dissatisfaction with his marriage, even when it had no hope of saving itself.

To an extent, I understand his point of view. We should be able to marry if we want to, but the fact that I am a westerner and he is not making things different.

A western man is always reluctant to marry a young girl because he sees her as a step-daughter to his wife, and he wants to protect her from his wife. This feeling is strengthened if he thinks that his wife has got control over the relationship.

This is a common phenomenon among men of eastern cultures. The reason for this is that in most western countries, there is little or no marriage pressure.

One thing that I have learned from Dan Mark and many other west men is that if they wish to save their marriages, they need to be stronger than their wives. It's not enough to keep everything between you and your wife to yourself. You need to let the world know about what is wrong with your marriage.

One of the first mistakes that most men make is believing that once the relationship ends, that everything will be all right. There is no "if". There is just the present. What is not present in the present is what is going to be there tomorrow.

To be strong, you need to put your feet up and take a good long look at your own life. The idea that we can get married and live happily ever after, without facing our own problems is an illusion.

If you cannot see your wife or your mate, talk to them about it. They might be willing to help you fix things. On the other hand, they might not. Maybe it's time to talk to your husband or wife about the problems in your marriage.

Women should talk about the issues in their marriage with their husbands, but when they talk to their husbands about problems in their marriage, they should not forget to turn the conversation to their marriage as well. Most men are not willing to talk about their marriage, but a few of them will open up to you. Listen to them.

All men, even those who are constantly looking for an excuse to get out of the house, will tell you that their main problem is that they never seem to find the time to spend with their wives in the evening. This is something that each wife can do something about. It might be too late for your marriage to be saved. But your marriage can be saved if you take action now.
