Design for humans:

First and foremost mistake a newbie designer make is that they often ignore the fact that they are designed for human audiences. Well, designers are humans themselves, too; it sounds weird. But yeah!

Of all the key points for website designers, interaction is the most important. Above all the peculiarities, a web design agency must be interactive and engaging because no one has time to explore your complex designs and dig out what they need. The best way is to design your website compliant with the persona of your target users. For this, you must identify your user's needs via review data.

Design comfort

Your website is the embodiment of a brand that it must depict in its truer meaning. However, you must design it to fit every different type of device. In this regard, one must be wary of the following key points for website designers.

1. Color contrasts must stand out in a variety of environmental conditions.

2. While adding buttons or swipe action, the designer must note the screen sizes and the respective thumb patterns.
3. The best suitable typeface sizes.
4. Interaction with the users.

Emotional connection

It is vital to building a connection between your brand and your customer at an emotional level. Hence, for a designer, color makes the best means to stir up a visitor's emotions. For example, red color relates to passion, green prompts a sense of prosperity, and purple is related to luxury. Apart from the colors, graphics and visuals can also be used for the purpose.

Focus mental triggers

As a core subject, all you need is leads and conversions with your web design. Hence, the last of our key points for website designers is of utmost importance is integrating mental triggers with your design. Following are the facts you should keep in mind.

1. Your visitors look for your brand validation to trust you.
2. Scarcity principle; they need what they can't have.
3. According to hick's law, more choices will lead to decision paralysis.
