Why Marble Effect Tiles and Slabs?

If marble is so admired, why were manufacturers compelled to produce a marble effect worktop, right? ...Well, just as every single thing comes with its own pair of pros and cons, marble also has some. The main reasons for the production of marble effect tiles and slabs are:

- Depletion of natural resources: Since marble is a naturally found raw material, its continuous extraction to meet the increasing demand of the rising population will deplete the resource. So, manufacturers are coming up with technologically produced alternatives to fulfil the need.
- Marble is porous: Although the softness of marble is an advantage for carving beautiful structures, its porosity becomes a drawback when installed in wet areas like bathrooms and sinks.
- Frequent Sealing Required: As mentioned above, the porousness of marble limits its use to wet areas. So a marble surface requires frequent sealing to be used as kitchen splashbacks, bathroom vanity, shower trays, bathroom splashbacks, kitchen worktops and every other area that might be prone to spills and stains. This regular requirement makes it a drawback amongst customers with a busy life schedules.

- Not Stain Resistant: Since it is porous, without sealing, it tends to show stains and blemishes, which makes it hard to use in busy areas like kitchens that frequently deal with citrus juices and coloured wines.
