But before reading out further, you need to know the concept of “Embracing Responsible Tourism”

Kumara Parvatha is one of the top Coorg visiting places inviting a huge footfall of tourists and thus comes with the responsibility of protecting and preserving the fragile ecosystem of the Western Ghats. Eco-friendly accommodations play a vital role in promoting sustainable tourism practices. By choosing to stay in such lodgings, trekkers contribute to conserving the region's biodiversity, minimizing their ecological footprint, and supporting local communities. This includes providing employment opportunities to locals, sourcing produce from nearby villages, and promoting traditional arts and crafts.

Sustainable Homestays with Local Flavor

One of the eco-conscious options for trekkers is to choose sustainable homestays in nearby villages. These homestays are typically run by local families, providing visitors with a chance to experience the region's culture and traditions firsthand. It also allows you to relish the amazing cuisines and peculiarities of the particular region. Such accommodations often follow eco-friendly practices, including water conservation, waste management, and organic farming. Staying in a traditional homestay not only supports the local economy of Coorg tourist places but also fosters cultural exchange between travellers and indigenous communities. So, be ready to tackle the Bangalore to Coorg distance, i.e., approximately 242 kilometres and lure your senses by being to a spectacular destination!

Tented Campsites amidst the Wilderness

Another authentic way to experience nature while trekking is by staying in tented campsites. These eco-friendly camps are carefully set up to minimize the impact on the environment. As per our Kumara Parvatha trek plan after a short halt at Kukke Subramanya Temple, you will proceed to Bhattara Mane Base Camp where you get to pitch your tents. Nestled in the heart of the wilderness, trekkers can immerse themselves in the sounds of the forest, sleep under star-studded skies, and wake up to the melodious calls of birds. Tented accommodations promote a deep sense of connection with nature and provide trekkers with an unforgettable experience in the lap of the Western Ghats.

Responsible Trekking Practices

Staying closer to nature also involves adopting responsible trekking practices. Trekkers are encouraged to follow the "Leave No Trace" principle, which emphasizes leaving the trails and campsites as they found them. Proper waste disposal, respecting wildlife, and refraining from causing any harm to the environment are essential aspects of eco-friendly trekking.

Conclusion

The Kumara Parvatha trekking is an adventure that takes trekkers through the splendid beauty of the Western Ghats.
