Taj Mahal: Most Imaginative Quartzite Countertops

MATERIALS

Taj Mahal is a quartzite material with a creamy, grey, and white color scheme that may be customized to fit almost any style. One of the reasons Taj Mahal quartzite countertops are so popular is because it closely resembles marble in appearance while having the hardness and durability of granite. The slabs contain broad color waves and swirls, a fascinating streak-like veining, and subtle white, amber, and gold patterns that exhibit a sense of intriguing movement without overwhelming the vision. Like any other naturally quarried stone this one also comes in a range of shades with quite a number of color variations possible. Overall, the hue of kitchen worktops made by this stone is light, and it looks great in both warm and neutral kitchens.

This natural stone gets its name from India's historical landmark, the Taj Mahal because its colours are similar to that of the monument's majestic beauty. However, many people mistake this natural stone for granite, which creates confusion. It is to be noted that, despite its name being the Taj Mahal, the stone is not quarried in India. Instead, like many quartzite stones, this slab also hails from Brazil.

About Quartzite

Quartzite countertops are a natural stone that is gaining popularity in the creative industry due to its marble-like beauty, granite-like sturdiness, and the vast choice of application alternatives. Quartzite is a metamorphic rock that develops naturally from sandstone and modifies over time under extreme heat and pressure. It's a naturally robust, heat-resistant stone that mimics marble but is more durable and resistant to scratches and other deterioration. It is found in quarries all throughout the world, but Brazil produces the more stunning and exotic designs. Quartzite has a hardness rating of 7 to 8 on the Mohs scale, which is equivalent to granite. It is scratch-resistant and acid-resistant, hence it will not etch when subjected to acids from citrus fruits and vinegar. Quartzite is suitable for work-tops, fireplace surrounds, breakfast bars, and practically any other use where granite would be appropriate. For households, this stone is becoming increasingly popular as a countertop material.

Vintage Touch Quartzite that looks like Marble:

For your cabinets, go with beige, cream or off-white colors if you want to create a clean, simple look, much like an all-white kitchen, but the atmosphere here will be more of a softer kind.

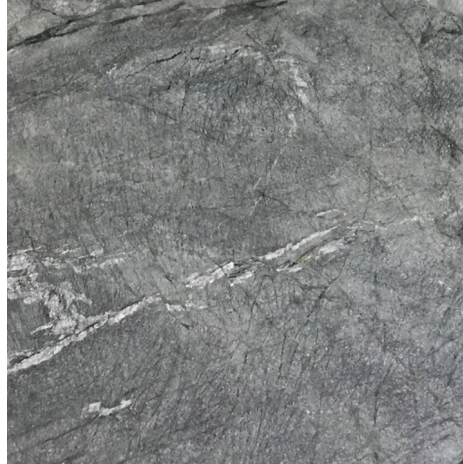

Get your look complete with intricately designed furniture that exhibits high craftsmanship skills. Choose interesting tones and textures. Pay attention that your cabinet pulls and handles are aligning as well. Pick accents like vases and crockery sets that are functional as well as intriguing, so that they serve purposes of display items as well. With these touches of antiquity, your vintage-style kitchen is ready for the feels.

Quartzite Kitchens with Traditional Touch

The natural tones of Taj Mahal best quartzite countertops are also perfect for a more traditional, rustic look in the kitchen. To create and complete this impact, pair your countertops with natural dark-wood cabinetry, aged, weathered appearing furniture, and basic, dark-toned cabinet door and drawer handles. A leathered countertop with an unpolished chiselled edge profile can add to the rustic character of this kitchen design you are wanting to replicate. If you are rooting for a more modern outlook with your stone worktops, polished finish and sleek edges can successfully do so by adding a trendy element to the entire design.

Colorful Appeal Quartzite Tile:

The brown quartzite countertops and beige tones of the Taj Mahal quartzite can be complemented with navy blue tints. They provide a sophisticated style that allows you to enter today's trends with a timeless aesthetic for individuals who desire a look with more color. Choose a navy blue with a grey undertone, for a more neutral appearance; or go big with a brighter blue like indigo, for a more vibrant effect. Create a luxurious touch by opting for brushed nickel or dazzling silver hardware. If you are aiming to warm up the entire appearance, you can do so with brass and copper hardware that bring out the brown and gold while also executing a subtle contrast with the blue tones.
