It is not difficult to develop an annotated bibliography of different sources if you are aware of the strategies. There are different strategies of writing critical annotated bibliographies; some of the strategies are as follows:

Choosing Type

There are three different types of annotated bibliographies which are descriptive, informative and analytical. Descriptive annotation is one that includes the description of the source without including the summary, hypothesis, actual argument and message of the source. In the informative type of annotation, summary, message and argument of the source are included. It also includes the methodology and findings. An evaluative annotation includes the personal evaluation of the essay writer service source by the writer. This type of annotation answers different questions.

Choosing Source

There are two techniques to identify sources for the annotated bibliography:

1. The first technique is to find out the recently published books or articles regarding the topic about which annotated bibliography has to be developed. After identifying sources, analyze the sources which have been cited by the different thesis writing help authors. This list of the sources which have been used by authors can provide you with an idea about the prior research on the same topic.
2. The second technique is to identify different sources like books, journals, articles about the topic of the annotated bibliography. After identifying sources, use their titles and paste them on Google scholar. Search the title in the form of a phrase at Google Scholar you will find a reference link followed by a number. This number will give you an idea about the number of studies that cited that particular source after its publication.

The purpose of the assignment and the research problem will determine the method of selecting sources for annotation.

Strategies to Define Scope

The sources need to be well-defined and sufficiently narrow in coverage to be included in the annotated bibliography.

Aspect: Always choose one aspect while explaining your research problem. Do not use multiple lenses to look at the write essay for me facet of your topic.

Time: In critical annotated bibliography a shorter period should be covered. The narrow focus will result in a well-developed annotated bibliography.

Comparative: the sources which describe the comparison between two issues related to your topic can be used to narrow down the bibliography.

Geography: If you select a narrow area of analysis, you will have to add a few items to the bibliography.

Type: Specific type, places, things or class of people need to be focused on in the bibliography.

Source: Bibliography includes the list of sources, you need to identify why one specific source is appropriate.

Combination: To develop a critical annotated bibliography, focus on more than one strategy. It will help to narrower or broader coverage of the specific research question.

Format

Based on the purpose and nature of the assignment or research, the format of the annotated bibliography is determined. Sources may be listed chronologically, alphabetically or under headings. Sources can also be divided thematically on the basis of the period. You can find a Professional Dissertation Writers on the writing website for the formatting of the annotated bibliography.
