Erectile dysfunction may be caused by a single factor or, and most commonly, by a combination of multiple factors. Erectile dysfunction was long thought to be psychologically caused in 90% of cases. Now we know that 50% of cases are organic or physical (there are structural alterations that cause it). However, it must be remembered that although Erectile dysfunction is of physical origin, from the moment erection failures begin, psychological problems appear that maintain and frequently aggravate the problem.

The organic causes of erectile dysfunction are diabetes, high blood pressure (and its treatment), stress, vascular and heart diseases, trauma, hormonal alterations, surgery for prostate cancer and/or colon, etc. Also, regardless of the original reason, feelings of guilt, anticipatory anxiety, and low self-esteem compound the problem. Therefore, it is necessary to know that there are solutions, sometimes with one or two visits to the urologist-andrologist, and in others with the combination of psycho-sexologists, the solution to the problem is not complicated.

Type of Erectile Dysfunction

Functional erectile dysfunction

It is frequent in young people, due to inexperience, fears, fear of contracting an infection, AIDS, and in general any situation that interferes or diverts attention during sexual intercourse.

Organic Erectile dysfunction

It has a pathological origin, such as diabetes, arteriosclerosis, neurological diseases, sequelae of accidents, or the taking of drugs intended to control hypertension, cholesterol or depression and psychological disorders (anxiolytics). Drug and alcohol use also influences. Don't forget: alcohol leads to desire but not to the consummation of the act.

Other frequent causes are stress with physical or mental exhaustion. In addition to a bad relationship with the partner, dislikes, withdrawal, lack of interest, routine, etc.
