

How is Twitch dealing with hate attacks?

How is Twitch dealing with hate attacks? – Twitch’s growing popularity has brought bad news for streamers. In recent months, many Twitch streamers have reported hate attacks, which are users using Twitch’s raid culture to hijack other users’ chats with bot accounts and post hateful comments.

Table of Contents

- Twitch dealing with hate attacks
- What is Twitch’s raid culture? And what are hate attacks?
- How has Twitch reacted?
- Conclusion

Twitch dealing with hate attacks

If you’ve joined Twitch recently, you should know about these attacks and what Twitch is doing to combat them. That’s why we’ve gathered all the essential information about Twitch hate attacks in this article. So read on.

What is Twitch’s raid culture? And what are hate attacks?

Twitch's raid culture refers to the practice of sending viewers to other streamers' channels. For example, if you like someone's channel and their content, you can send your viewers to that channel, which would be an attack. It's a way to show support for other content creators on the platform, and for the most part, it's helped develop a sense of community.

However, malicious users have twisted the culture and sent viewers to abuse other content creators. These hate attacks have often been directed at marginalized content creators, and the posts left by real users and bot accounts involved in the attacks are typically racist, transphobic, and offensive.

Read More;- <https://streamingadvise.com/how-is-twitch-dealing-with-hate-attacks>