In this article, we will learn more about how the patent process works with InventHelp and why it is so important to have this protection in place.

Why You Need This Protection

There are many reasons why patent protection is so vital for inventors, and this is why it is a process that needs to be sorted out with speed and efficiency by qualified legal experts.

One of the risks you face as an inventor is someone coming along and pinching your idea. If someone gets to hear about your idea but you have no protection in place, there is nothing to stop them from coming along and claiming it as their own idea and then patenting it in their own name. This could prove disastrous for you. Likewise, if you have already created a prototype of your invention, someone could come along and copy the design if you have no protection in place, and this could also be a disaster.

Another issue is that someone else might genuinely come up with the same idea or design as you without any prior knowledge of yours. If they then patent this idea or design, you will find yourself facing issues, as legally they have come up with the idea or design first because they patented it first. This is naturally something you want to avoid, so patent protection is vital.

One of the other things to keep in mind is that when you have your invention patented, it will be far more appealing to investors and businesses that you might want to work with or market it to. It gives them reassurance and shows that you are serious about your idea or product.

The Process of Patent Protection

When you go through InventHelp, there are certain steps that are followed with regard to the patent process. Some of the steps are:

1. Contact InventHelp

The first thing new inventors will need to do is to get in touch with the professionals at InventHelp. It is important to remember that these professionals focus on packaging and submitting your invention idea, so they can help to get it reviewed by the thousands of companies on their database, and they can help to get things moving forward. However, they cannot comment on the patentability of your idea, and they do not sort out the patent personally.

What they can do, however, is then refer you to a specialist patent attorney, and this is the type of legal professional you will need in order to move forward with getting your invention patented.

2. Get a Patent Attorney Referral

As mentioned above, InventHelp will be able to refer you to a patent attorney so that you can get the process completed with speed and efficiency with the help of a legal expert. It is important to act quickly when it comes to patent protection and having access to a team with the right links and resources to get you referred to a reputable patent attorney can prove invaluable.

It is also important to remember that if two people have the same idea or design, it is the first to file for a patent that will be successful even if they were not the first to come up with the idea. So, the faster you act in terms of getting the patent into place, the better. InventHelp experts can assist with this by getting you referred with speed and efficiency so that the process can be quickly completed.

3. Consider Patent Options

One of the other things that you need to do is to consider your patent options and decide which will be the right one for your needs. There are provisional and non-provisional patent options, with the latter being the one that is most commonly recommended. With a provisional patent, the protection is only in place for the space of a year. With the non-provisional option, the protection lasts for up to 20 years, so you can then use it again without any issues.

4. Move Forward with Your InventHelp Journey

Once the patent protection has been sorted out and put into place, you can then continue moving forward with your journey with InventHelp. Of course, once you have filed and there is a patent pending, you can continue to market your invention idea with the help of the experts. So, you can still be productive and continue with your journey even while the patent is pending. Remember, it is the first to file that gets the patent, so as long as you file the application quickly, you can then benefit from peace of mind.

Patenting your idea or creation basically gives you protection on many levels, and this means greater peace of mind and security when it comes to your invention. It is vital that this process is carried out by the book in order to avoid problems further down the line, and this is why you need to ensure you use a professional legal patent expert.
