It changes a lot, so unfortunately get used to it not to get used to it. At Microsoft, they are still looking for the perfect arrangement of elements. Since the launch of the Xbox One, the look of the start screen and all subsequent screens have changed at least 5 times. We went through the split screen and sidebar pinning stage (handy, I'm still sad they gave it up) to the pop-up panels on the right edge and more and more options available in this view, without ever having to leave the game / app.

Currently, the start screen after turning on the console will display the game you have recently played on the largest tile. Next, achievements that you are close to, a position in the monthly achievement ranking and a game proposal from the Xbox store or information about current promotions. Below will be sections at your discretion. You can pin the information related to your favorite games, pins (i.e. shortcuts to turn on your favorite games / applications) in any order.

The highlights and graphic elements will be in the color of your choice, to be changed in the profile settings.

When you are in the game, clicking on the Xbox logo in the center of the controller will open a side panel where you can see achievements, online friends (and invite them to a game / group), recording settings, messages, recent notifications and pins. You can also quickly go to the current Games with Gold section. \
