

A Guide To Ornaments And Its Types

We have all heard about love meaning different for people and religions. A similar case follows for jewellery in India. The love language that Indians associate themselves with, in terms of jewellery is undeniable. The country is filled with different variations and types that one can't help but get lost in. To prevent that feeling, we are here to provide you with a list of types that you can't choose to miss:

1. Gold Jewellery

The precious metal of prosperity is an investment for life. Given and taken on auspicious occasions, the emotional quotient is quite heavy when it comes to Gold Jewellery. Once you start purchasing, it doesn't come with a full stop. In fact, in India, people specifically buy Gold Jewellery, Gold Bangles or a specific 'gold-plated ornament' to get their daughters married off.

2. Antique Jewellery

If you belong to a traditional environment or have seen bangles design/ ancient and antique necklaces, you would find yourself connected to them. They often come in with a rustic and rough look that easily steals the light of the show. It is somewhat similar to old-school love that you can't forget.

3. Bridal Jewellery

Dolled up with Gold Jewellery and heavy wedding wear, this is how an Indian bride would typically look like. If for nothing else, gold bracelets for women are specifically exchanged in the name of family heirloom and passed on to generations. They are intricately designed with patterns and colours, providing the bride's face with a golden glow and wedding cheer.

4. Kundan Jewellery

Originated from Rajasthan, Kundan Jewellery is designed to perfection. It is studded with stones and intricate meenakari that is widely worn with heavy outfits for a wedding/ event.

5. Silver Jewellery

Available as bracelets, a chain necklace, earrings, armlets and nose rings, silver jewellery is associated with sophistication and a simple look for casual wear.

6. Fashion Jewellery

As the name suggests, this type keeps evolving with trends. This is worn with costume jewellery, stitched with cheaper and lightweight materials and is also sold artificially to pair with, on ramp walks/ get-togethers with friends.

7. Navratna Jewellery

Nav, meaning nine is studded with nine gemstones in a single piece of art. This is mostly worn on the Indian festival of Navratri and is presumed with the belief of ensuring the well-being of the person who is entitled to wear it.

8. Paambadam Jewellery

Worn by women in Kerala and Tamil Nadu, Paambadam Jewellery is a heavy type of earring, which is shaped in the form of a snake. They are produced in a way, where they elongate the earlobes and are linked with the statement of power.

These types are for you to refer to as a guide. From Gold to Paambadam Jewellery, this is a list of items that are popularly worn and preferred by women in the country. From simple occasions to auspicious ones, women can wear them at any point in time, irrespective of the reactions/ expectations set by the society.
