Why You Should Seal Your Limestone

On whether or not to seal limestone, among other natural stones, there are differing views on the field of natural stone. On the one hand, authorities frequently advise sealing all stones. On the other hand, sealants have a reputation for changing the natural appearance of the stone. All stone surfaces should generally be sealed. Sealing is important to stop other particles and liquids from penetrating below the surface, especially with porous stones like limestone. Unsealed stone floors and worktops may contain liquids that have dried out and been crushed into the surface. This can be particularly troublesome if you frequently drop things in your kitchen and bathroom because stained stones can be easily caused by colourful liquids on lighter-hued stones. Similar to interior limestone, outdoor limestone used around patios and pool decks may be exposed to various elements, chemicals, and heavy traffic.

Limestone Flooring Trends:

Go with a Greyar Tone

All of the neutral colours of limestone flooring are available. Gray is the new white, therefore finding limestone tiles with a grey tinge can be beneficial for your home. Greyar limestone is simpler to clean since it simply hides dirt. Additionally, they are quite durable and complement any other colour you use in your house.

A Hit is Always Luxury

If you're unsure, choose something opulent and exquisite and you can't go wrong. Although you shouldn't too mix and match designs in your home, investing in upscale limestone that will improve your property's appeal won't be detrimental to its value. Prospective consumers observe luxury, appreciate it, and desire it.

Limestone is Everlasting

One thing to keep in mind regarding limestone is that in addition to being strong, it is also a classic material that never goes out of style. You are following trends just by purchasing limestone. Furthermore, these patterns aren't transitory. Instead, they intend to remain.

Limestone is timeless, so whichever colour and style you choose, you won't likely later regret it because of shifting fashions.

Get Old Floors Back

It is simple to remove the carpeting from one room and replace it with new carpet. Using limestone to replace outdated flooring is a popular trend in flooring. Although it may not seem as cosy as carpet, limestone feels considerably warmer and softer underfoot than other natural stones.

Limestone Living Room Options

Coffee Desk

Any living room's coffee table frequently becomes its focal point. Around the coffee table and on the couches are gathered your family and guests. They utilise it for their beverages and are aware of it. Because limestone is available in slab form and can be cut to the ideal size for your coffee table, having a limestone coffee table is a terrific option. It adds a touch of beauty to the space and is long-lasting, similar to a kitchen countertop.

Fireplace

If you opt to surround your living room fireplace with limestone, it can double as a grandstand. The cool stone offers you a range of colour options to complement or contrast with the existing aesthetic of the space. Limestone is the material you use if you want something opulent and majestic. An attractive limestone fireplace is a terrific focal point in any space, even if you don't use it frequently.

Side Desk

You might keep some of the chopped-off areas from larger projects if you like limestone and want to use it around the house to make smaller side tables for the living room. With limestone strewn all over the house, this can bind the entire property together and give it a unified appearance. Save the bits that were chopped off the side of your kitchen's limestone countertops, for instance, and make a lovely side table with a top made of the material.

Flooring

Although it is a terrific alternative, not everyone considers limestone for the living room floor. Limestone tiles will resist wear and tear effectively if your living room sees a lot of entry and exit activity. Additionally, you don't need to be concerned about spills or stains. Thought to be too cold and hard for bare feet by some homeowners, limestone is actually a fairly soft stone that adds comfort to the space.

Maintenance of a Limestone Floor

The secret to maintaining your limestone floor looking its best and ensuring that you will be rewarded with a floor that will be durable and long-lasting for years to come is maintenance. Because limestone flooring requires little upkeep, it is perfect for use not only in the house but also in public and commercial spaces. As soon as your floor is installed, maintenance of limestone flooring will begin. Although it is softer than marble and has pores, limestone is extremely durable.
