

CV Writing vs Resume Writing | A Brief Comparison

CV stands for Curriculum Vitae, a Latin word meaning the course of one's life. A CV is a comprehensive survey of a candidate's educational history and professional experiences. This document is used in countries like Europe, Africa, the Middle East, and Asia and typically requested in scholarly fields and hardly in other contexts. The Disciplines where CV is necessary for the job application processes are professor, teacher, art curator, academic research, and for a candidate who holds a Ph.D. degree.

In contrast, resume reflects a synopsis of the job seeker's core capabilities and striking achievements and focuses on professional expertise. Generally, this document is used in countries like the United States, Australia, and Canada. A resume is a brief and targeted checklist which provides the hiring managers, a concise depiction of a nominee's pivotal accomplishments.

A school of thought suggests that for the query CV Writing vs Resume Writing, it can be concluded that resume is suitable for Private sector jobs and CV for employment in the public service sector.

A resume can have a variety of versions. A resume can be customized whenever applying for a position following the company's description. But as CV is extensive information based on one's academic and career biography so it cannot be significantly tailored for the job the candidate is applying for.

As the primary concern of this topic is CV Writing vs Resume Writing, let's have a look at the layout differences of a CV and a resume.

The layout of a CV: The things to include in a CV are contact information, personal information, CV summary employment history, educational fact and figures, professional qualifications, computer expertise, publications, professional collaborations, grants and fellowships, awards, and honors, licenses, and volunteer work.

The layout of a resume: Header, then your name and contact details, resume summary, skills, work experience, education, additional relevant experience (optional).

In addition to compiling the list of all the above particulars, highlight how these accomplishments will be helpful for the development of the organization. Moreover, it will be useful to avoid using a CV when a resume will be sufficient. Use proper language and avoid mistakes and typos for both CV writing and resume writing.

SetMyCV is a resource of professional writers with peerless writing services. Visit SetMyCV to get a professional, well-structured, and impressive CV or a resume.

A Brief Comparison

A brief comparison of CV writing and resume writing is as follows:

- Three prime differences between CV are the length, purpose, and layout.
- A resume is usually best for entry-level career seekers, while CV engaged well with candidates with tons of experience.
- Both CV summary and resume summary are the outlines of the whole respected document.
- Concerning the formats, the resume is customarily under one page, but a CV can be considerably longer.
- Try to avoid expressing banal skills that are common between the people in the resume. In contrast, those skills can be added in the CV, to name a few, communication skills, flexibility, Microsoft office, multitasking, leadership, and teamwork.
- Although CV and resume share some likeness. However, one should not use them interchangeably.

Skilled professionals at SetMyCV are well aware of a brief compression of a CV and a resume. Utilize SetMyCV outstanding expertise in CV writing and Resume building services to get an instant response from your prospective recruiter.