

Level-up your gaming Rig! - Take your playstyle to the next level with these gaming essentials.

Gaming as an industry has grown rapidly along the years and with the development of new and advanced games the requirement of Hi-Tech gaming peripherals have also increased. Many companies compete to make the best performing gaming peripherals. Here are some of the essentials that a gamer would require.

1. Laptop - Lenovo Legion Y540

Lenovo Legion series has introduced some of the best laptops to the gaming industry. Lenovo Legion Y540 is one of them. It is a well-built, high-performance gaming laptop. It was powered by an Intel Core i7-9750H CPU with 16GB of RAM and an Nvidia GeForce RTX 2060 with 6GB of video RAM. Storage came in the form of a 1TB Samsung PCIe NVMe solid-state drive. Users get an option to expand the storage by adding a 2.5-inch hard drive.

It performs incredibly well as an everyday laptop, running multiple applications is not a problem, switching between applications is smooth. The CPU and GPU performance is also very good.

As a gaming laptop, its performance is very good even at full HD resolution, there is no frame loss and the gaming experience is very smooth. The laptop is able to deliver 140 Frames per second even at high resolution.

The Legion Y540 comes with a 15.6-inch IPS LCD panel with Full HD resolution and 144Hz refresh rate. The display is sharp and colourful which will definitely enhance your gaming experience. The keyboard has flat, white-backlit keys, one might face some problems with the alignment of the keys as it is different from the usual alignment. As a result, you end up mistyping quite a bit. The laptop has a classy design which looks good and feels sturdy when held. At 2.3 kilogrammes, the Legion Y540 is quite heavy in the hands.

The legion has one of the weakest batteries among its competitors, the 52.5Wh three-cell internal battery on the Legion Y540 can run for approximately 1 hour, 40 minutes in a single charge.
