What is Auto Body Repair?

Auto body repair is the process of repairing and restoring a vehicle's body after an accident or collision. The goal of auto body repair is to restore the vehicle to its pre-accident condition both in terms of functionality and appearance. The repair process involves several steps, including assessing the damage, disassembling the damaged areas, repairing or replacing damaged parts, and finally, reassembling the vehicle.

Assessing the Damage

The first step in the auto body repair process is to assess the damage. Our experienced technicians will carefully inspect your vehicle to determine the extent of the damage. We'll also take pictures of the damage and work with your insurance company to prepare an estimate for the repairs.

Disassembling the Damaged Areas

Once we have assessed the damage, the next step is to disassemble the damaged areas. This allows us to get a better look at the damage and determine the best course of action for repair. We'll also order any necessary parts at this time.

Repairing or Replacing Damaged Parts

After we have disassembled the damaged areas, we'll begin repairing or replacing any damaged parts. This may involve welding, sanding, or painting. We use only the highest quality parts and materials to ensure that your vehicle is restored to its pre-accident condition.

Reassembling the Vehicle

Finally, once all the damaged parts have been repaired or replaced, we'll reassemble your vehicle. Our technicians take great care to ensure that all parts are properly aligned, and that your vehicle is functioning as it should be.
