What's the Catch? Is This Gear Really Free?

In some cases, yes. In all cases, there will be a bit of information exchange at the least. Most of the links below will send you your free survival gear as long as you cover shipping and handling.

Most websites will send out the tools as long as you cover shipping. Is the shipping cost a little inflated? Probably, but looking at the cost overall, you come out way ahead of the game.

Note: Carefully read all the fine print on the sales and/or checkout page. Some of these deals come with a monthly subscription service that they may automatically sign you up for. Some I'm a fan of, others I am not too excited about, but that's a personal preference.

In any case, make sure you are aware of what you are signing up for. If you want the item, but not the subscription, read their “Terms of Service” page on how to opt-out or cancel after you get your free survival gear.

A Trade of Information:

The vast majority of the sites will also collect your email address (OK, all of them). This allows them to keep in contact with you or send announcements of new deals and additional free survival gear.

My advice is to dedicate a separate email address to these requests.
