

The Tesla Workers Campaign for Unionization

Tesla workers in New York are attempting to start a union, which would be a first for the electric car company run by Elon Musk.

They wrote a letter to the company explaining the plans and asking leaders to agree on ground rules for a “fair” union election.

Mr. Musk has opposed organizing efforts at his company, but he has not said anything about this.

Organizers say about 2,000 people work at the plant in Buffalo.

Workers United, the union that helped start the recent surge in unionization at Starbucks, is behind the campaign.

In a press release, the Buffalo workers said, “We are organizing a union with Workers United in Upstate New York that looks as innovative as Tesla, the company we work for, and to build a collaborative environment that will strengthen the company.”

Campaigners say that the organizing committee comprises some of the roughly 800 analysts in Buffalo who work on Tesla’s autopilot systems.

They hope to work with other people at the facility, such as people who work in a call center and make solar panels and batteries...Read More

Source: California Observer