

How to Choose a Language Learning Resource

If you are learning a language, there is plenty of online information to choose from. From free webinars to resources for language teachers, there will be something suitable to fit your needs and budget. Unfortunately, there isn't an overnight fix that will instantly transform you into a fluent speaker in short order.

The most effective way to learn a language is through practice and repetition. Utilize a language learning resource as you go along, but make an effort necessary for meaningful progress.

A great resource will include audio and video lessons, as well as textbooks. Audio provides a great opportunity to hear the language in context and practice speaking it; similarly, videos offer words and grammar rules you can watch/listen to regularly.

Flashcards are an effective way to review what you have learned. Whether used online, in a notebook, or with a friend, flashcards provide a quick and efficient way to learn new words or phrases.

Quizlet is one of the premier sites for flashcard creation and organization, boasting hundreds of thousands of decks to choose from. It's simple to create and organize with its PDF export that can be printed out for reference.

Linguatics is a subscription-based service offering courses in over 60 languages through AI-based repetition training. It's perfect for polyglots and busy learners who don't have much time to devote to traditional study methods.

The site's lessons incorporate AI-driven repetition training, native speaker dialogues, and interactive review sessions to help you master the fundamentals of a new language quickly. You can try out their free trial to see if it works for you.

You can opt to learn a specific language and have the website translate it for you. There are courses available in many different languages, including Arabic, Chinese, French, Italian, and Spanish.

There are also plenty of free webinars you can attend to stay current with current trends and research in language teaching. These events usually feature speakers from a language association and offer an invaluable chance to network with other educators in your region while exchanging ideas.

Luca is a multilingual polyglot, and his YouTube channel showcases his multilingual interviews, lessons, and tips. Additionally, he maintains a blog where he shares his knowledge of learning multiple languages.

He's also written an inspiring book that chronicles his journey from zero to mastering eight languages in five months. It's essential reading for anyone wanting to learn a language and has a deep passion for the topic.

It is noteworthy that he has also published an article for the TESOL journal, published by the International Association of Teachers of English to Speakers of Other Languages (TESOL). In this piece, he explains why language learning should be a lifelong journey and how it can be achieved in any setting.

About us

No matter if you're learning English at home or abroad, a language learning resource can make all the difference. But with so many available, how do you select the right one for you? Let's begin by discussing your objectives. Are you trying to determine if this resource is suitable for your level of proficiency and interests?

For instance, if you're learning French with the goal of traveling to Africa, do you need to learn any specific phrases or just general travel tips?

For your target language, it may be better to look for a resource that provides lessons rather than an all-inclusive one that teaches everything.

There are various methods for learning languages online, each requiring a dedicated amount of time and focus.

Listening to language podcasts is a popular way for learners to hone their speaking skills.

They may also boost confidence when using the new language in real-life scenarios.

Anki is an ideal option for learners who prefer flashcards. You can create your own cards or use those created by other users in the program, helping you memorize words and phrases faster.

For visual learners, Linguatics offers an engaging way to learn a new language. The service offers clips from movies and news, motivational speeches, and music videos with interactive captions so you can follow along with what is said.
