

Toxic Termites & Here Is A List Of Harm They Can Cause To Humans

Termites are one of the most dangerous pests. It is advisable to do the anti termite treatment as soon as you can. Because not only do they harm your furniture and spread disease but also affect your daily life. They are tiny in size which makes them difficult to be visible to our naked eyes. This makes termite treatment the only way to repel them. If they last for a long time at your place they can cause various problems. Some of them are as follows:

Termite's Bite and Sting

Termite bites at night when everyone is sleeping. Even though their bites are not fatal, they cause itching and swelling that might feel unbearable at times. Their stings are really painful. This can further cause allergic reactions to your body that may take a while to be treated or can sustain your entire life.

Mould and Asthma

Mould is a type of fungi that is formed in colonies where termites reside. As the termite eats your furniture they disperse mould. They are harmful to humans as they can spread in the air as well as fall on our skin. If someone inhales the air contaminated by mould the person can suffer from Asthma, migraine headaches, sore throat, weakness, etc. Only proper termite control services can help you cure these moulds.

Damage Property

Termites can pose severe damage to your furniture and property. Because they survive on cellulose present in the wood they will attack whatever wood they find including the furniture at your place. Buildings and houses that are infested by termites with time become unfit to live. You must carry termite pest control to protect yourself from any such consequences.

The Use of Pesticides

Along with termites, the pesticides and chemicals you use to tackle their problem may harm your health. Reports are conveying that the use of unverified chemicals has caused rashes, diarrhoea and in some cases even cancer.
