What Sets Art Deco Rings Apart from Others

Art deco rings are handcrafted during the art deco era (1920-1935). They are recognizable by their symmetrical and angular designs. Continue reading to know in detail.

Exquisite Designs

When it comes to buying an engagement ring, most brides prioritize uniqueness. And that is where art deco rings have always taken the front seat. Art deco rings are famous for their distinctive details. Most importantly, you will notice highly skilled craftsmanship in every feature of each piece. Apart from diamonds, art deco engagement rings in London come with various stones that are held by prongs in different styles.

Contrasting Colours

As stated above, art deco rings come with varieties of stones of different colours. The combination of diamonds and gems makes a ring look stunning. And that is what you can witness in an art deco ring. It means you can choose your engagement ring according to the colour of your outfit. An art deco ring with a combination of diamonds and gems can even enhance the beauty of your hand.

Geometric Designs

Art deco rings are popular for their geometric shapes - triangles, squares, rectangles, and more. They are the main characteristics of an art deco ring. But remember, a rectangular-shaped diamond shines less than round ones.

Unique Diamond Cuts

Art deco rings are also famous for their unique cut diamonds. In terms of this antique ring, emerald, rose, and mine cut are prominent. A diamond with these cuts has a softer look and larger faceting. They are perfect for romantic tones. So, isn't an art deco an ideal option for your engagement?

Platinum and White Gold Band

A band of platinum and white gold makes a ring look stunning. White gold is less expensive than platinum. But this precious metal looks splendid. So, if you are on a tight budget but want to buy a beautiful engagement ring within your determined budget, an art deco ring with a white gold band might be the right choice for you.
