

How to visit Canada on business?

How to visit Canada on business

If you want to move to Canada for business, you'll need to understand what a business visitor is, what you can do as a business visitor, and what you need to do and bring to enter Canada.

What is a business visitor?

Any person can be a business visitor if they:

- come to take part in international business activities without being part of the Canadian labor market
- are visiting Canada temporarily to
 - look for ways to grow their business
 - Come to invest
 - enhance their business relationships

How to show you're a business visitor?

To qualify as a business visitor to Canada, you must show that:

Your stay for less than 6 months

Your main place of business and source of income and profits is outside Canada

You don't have any plan to join the Canadian business.

You have documents that support your application

You meet Canada's basic entry requirements

You are not a criminal, security or health risk to Canadians

What do you need to enter Canada?

A passport or travel document

A valid visitor visa, if applicable

A valid green card, if you're a lawful permanent resident of the United States

24-hour contact details of your business host in Canada

Proof that you have enough money for both your stay in Canada and your return home

Letters of support from your parent company and a letter of invitation from the Canadian host business

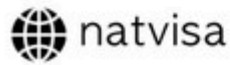

Types of activities

Activities you may conduct as a business visitor include:

- You can buy Canadian goods or services for a foreign business or government.
- You can take orders for goods or services.

- ✓ You can go to meetings, conferences, conventions or trade fairs.
- ✓ You can give after-sales service as part of a warranty or sales agreement.
- ✓ You can train employees of a Canadian branch of a foreign company.
- ✓ You can be trained by a Canadian parent company that you work for outside Canada.
- ✓ You can be trained by a Canadian company that has sold you equipment or services.

www.natvisa.com

© 2022 NATVISA.COM | All Rights Reserved

Follow us on

If you want to move to Canada for business, you'll need to understand what a business visitor is, what you can do as a business visitor, and what you need to do and bring to enter Canada. To know more visit us at www.natvisa.com.