Utilize consumer demand for sustainable products.

According to a recent IBM survey, nearly 8 out of 10 consumers stated sustainability is important to them, and 6 out of 10 consumers said they are willing to change their shopping patterns if they can lessen their environmental effects. These trends will have an effect on your company's preparation for serving an expanding target market of environmentally conscious consumers.

You are choosing to influence the world with your business by diversifying into eco-friendly apparel, but you are also empowering your customers to use their purchasing power to lessen their carbon footprint. You are encouraging more regional farmers, communities, and consumers to embrace the advantages of organic farming and more sustainable materials as you increase and grow your sales of eco-friendly products.

Expand your business with enduring products that have value

In addition to assisting you in having a beneficial impact on the environment, our selection of the best brands and materials allows for a more lasting print that will significantly improve your one-of-a-kind designs.

natural cotton

Natural organic cotton that has not been genetically modified is grown without the use of chemical pesticides or fertilizers (non-GMO). Conventional cotton growing employs chemicals that have the potential to contaminate the fields and water sources used by humans, plants, and animals, including farmers. However, if more people and businesses switch to organic cotton, we can lower cotton's potential contribution to global warming by up to 46%. We can also encourage more farmers to utilize natural farming practices like crop rotation, which supports the soil's flora and biodiversity.

The cotton used in the new collection was grown organically without the use of GMO seeds or hazardous chemicals, according to the Global Organic Textile Standard organization, which oversees certification for the production of organic fibers based on both ecological and social criteria.

Recycled polyester, which is created with yarn from post-consumer PET bottles, is also used in the new product line. These are the same plastic water bottle containers that would often wind up in a landfill or the ocean. 9.5 million tonnes of single-use plastic are dumped into the ocean every year, polluting the waters and the creatures and plants that live there. By opting to market goods made from recycled polyester, you may reduce the amount of plastic that is thrown away and encourage the creation of individualized hoodies, t-shirts, and sweatshirts.
