

Pakistan Cuts Power as National Grid Collapse

Millions of people in Pakistan lost power early Monday because of a problem with the country's national grid.

All the big cities, including Karachi, the largest, and Islamabad, the capital, were without power.

The power minister, Khurrum Dastagir, said the grid went down because of “frequency variation” in southern Pakistan.

He said this wasn't a big problem, and the power would be back soon.

People say Pakistan's frequent power outages are caused by bad management and insufficient infrastructure investment. For instance, it took hours to get the power back on after it went out in October...Read More
