

Los Angeles Whistleblower Attorney | Theory Law APC

The act of whistleblowing is one of courage and serves the public interest, as it can hold companies and organizations accountable for unlawful activity that affects the public. Federal and state laws, including the California Fair Employment and Housing Act (FEHA), provide protection for whistleblowers from any retaliatory action by their employers. Examples of potential retaliation claims include being fired or coerced into quitting for volunteering to testify in support of a coworker's sexual harassment lawsuit, being fired after reporting fraudulent activity that the owner engaged in, and being suspended or fired after making formal or informal complaints to a supervisor regarding unlawful discrimination.
