

Blood Warmer Market Trends, Research Report, Growth, Opportunities, Forecast 2022-2028

The global blood warmer market is anticipated to grow at a considerable CAGR of 8.9% during the forecast period. The primary factor accelerating the growth of the market includes the rising number of chronic diseases such as cancer, tumor, arthritis, and others across the globe. During the treatment of these chronic diseases, blood and blood-related products are used which are stored at low temperatures to prevent them from decaying. Thus, during transfusion of red blood cells (RBCs) and platelets, among others, blood stored at low temperatures is warmed to normal temperature before transfusion by using blood warmer devices. According to the World Health Organization (WHO), in 2019, the prevalence of anemia patients was 29.9% in women aged between 15 to 49 years. Moreover, the problem of anemia in children was estimated at around 39.8%.

Another factor accelerating the market growth is the rise in utilization of blood warmer devices during the COVID-19 pandemic. There was a significant rise in demand for infusion therapy owing to the increase in COVID-19 cases across the globe. Blood warmer devices are used to raise fluids to body temperature and provide speedy recovery while reducing the risk of transfusion shock. Post-COVID-19 pandemic, several market players started focusing on integrating next-generation technologies within the blood warmer devices to cater to the rising demand for the devices in hospitals and clinics. For instance, in July 2019, Baxter International Inc. launched TherMax blood warmer and PrisMax systems. The product launched includes next-generation technology for continuous renal replacement therapy. The product's innovative technology simplifies therapy delivery and provides improved flexibility to the hospital's ICU.
