BuildLabs kicked off the spring with some fabulous news. Our cofounder Punit Chugh was quoted in the much-revered House Beautiful publication!

As an expert and authority in construction, particularly when it comes to high-end Tiny Homes and ADUs (accessory dwelling units), Chugh is a trusted resource on the costs of building a structure of any size:

“...you can determine the cost of building a house of a normal size in your region, then scale down the number by about 45 to 50 percent to come up with a ballpark cost of building a high-quality tiny house, says Punit Chugh, founder and operations director of BuildLabs, a Bridgehampton, New York–based architecture and construction firm.”

As a design + build firm focused on creating value and unparalleled transparent services for the homeowner, Chugh also commented on cost-savings.

“Look into grant programs that exist for tiny home construction, suggests Chugh. Also, consider how long you want to live in the tiny home. “While it might be cheaper to buy a tiny home, there are creative companies that are optimizing the design-build process to make sure that the clients looking for tiny homes get the highest quality solution, and is indeed your 'forever home,' he says.”
