Naturally, the answer to that question is going to be different in every individual situation.

There isn't any one blanket statement that's going to cover each and every incident that will arise.

However, it sometimes also depends on the severity of the situation. For instance, with clogged drains, sometimes the clogged could be very mild and able to be cleared by various items which are available in any store. In other instances, however, it is possible that choosing a licensed drain clearing professional to be released to your house and conserve the issue is the only viable solution - the clogs are extremely severe that no quantity of over-the-counter product you poured down the sink is going to make the least bit of difference, and in reality could just make the problem all that much worse.

Every time that comes up, you should make the call for yourself.
