

Close casino gambling houses near the southern city of Azov

According to a report by Casino GamesPro, Russia has passed legislation to make casino gambling illegal nationwide, except in four different regions, including the coastal states near the port city of Vladivostok, parts of Kaliningrad in the Baltic Sea, Altai Krai and the Shchervinovsky region about 43 miles southwest of Azov. Relegation in favor of competitors:

But President Vladimir Putin is said to have approved a modification to the measure, which would disqualify the Krasnaya Poliana region near the Black Sea port city of Sochi, which was added to the list after hosting the 22nd Winter Olympics that year, along with parts of the recently annexed Crimea.

Over the past decade, CJSC Shambala and Kazan-based rival Royal Time Group have reportedly invested more than $91.2 million to host casinos in the Shchervinovsky district, and the pair continue to seek guarantees from Moscow that all of these cash has not been wasted.

No rewards available:

But Casino Gamespro reported earlier this year that casino operators in the Shervinovsky area were left in limbo after a draft bill emerged that prevented them from making any financial claims for the upcoming closure of gambling zones. This is because the proposed measures must address the future firmly and close the area within 10 years of being designated so that companies can be rewarded.
