The Super Bowl provides some of the greatest sports moments of the year, and 2014 should be no different with the big game featuring a salivating matchup between the Denver Broncos and Seattle Seahawks.

It's the second time since the 1970 AFL/NFL merger that the No. 1 ranked defense has played the No. 1 ranked offense in the Super Bowl. The previous one was an easy 48-21 victory for the vaunted Tampa Bay Buccaneers defense over the Oakland Raiders in Super Bowl XXXVII.

This bodes well for the Seahawks, who had the top-ranked passing defense and the seventh-best run defense during the regular season. They match up well against Peyton Manning's record-setting offense, specifically in the secondary where all-pro Richard Sherman and elite safety Kam Chancellor make it difficult for receivers to get open.
