

Boom Games update office space; moving from UK to Michelle Quad

Booming Games, an online real-money gambling game developer, has moved its Maltese office from Mshida Englad to Michel's Quad, announcing the results of one strategic move that will strengthen the company's position in key and prestigious locations.

Office Upgrade

Experiencing tremendous growth in Malta means the country has been able to hire highly trained professionals, and the company needed up-to-date office space needed to keep pace with developers' performance and future goals. It was also an appropriate solution, as the office in Quad was well equipped and offered many advantages, including gyms, restaurants, child care facilities, and shops, among other things. However, that is not all. This is because office space is truly the best, with a huge commercial area of 44,000 square meters and open space of more than 7,000 square meters.

Commenting on the new office, Boom Games CEO Max Niehussen said, "We can no longer expect the recent move to a Quad office as it truly embodies our success story. Choosing the Quad as a new office was a natural choice, as it perfectly matches our vision for the future. And for us, it is more than just an office. It is a symbol of our continued pursuit of excellence and our commitment to providing a special work environment for our amazing team."

In this regard, Boom's chief commercial officer, Frederick Niehussen, added, "We are excited to move to Quad Office, a dynamic location that is perfectly aligned with our commercial aspirations. Elaborate designs and top-notch amenities, including great restaurants, strengthen customer meetings, build stronger connections, increase creativity, and take our commercial success to the next level."
