What does Donald Trump need to fix in the United States of America???

It's simple, Donald Trump must implement the plan of reforms of the US economy developed by Americans for Asian countries 70 years ago. This will be a very difficult task for him because its foundations, not currently present in the Republican plan, mean a social and economic revolution in the US.

Asian's Capital Development was a policy advised to Asian countries by the United States and its implementation began after World War II in Japan and spread to northeastern Asian countries.

It includes several stages, the first of which is the deconcentration of agricultural ownership, grassroots development of entrepreneurship and state-supported development of human capital, liberalization and opening of economies and development of export processing industries, which are an impulse for the development of domestic industry and finally the development of the service sector in the third stage of development. All Asian countries in which per capita income increased after World War II applied the policy advised and supported by the USA. The effect of the ACD policy in China over the last 30 years is the rapid growth of the potential of Chinese industry, which is slowly starting to allow China to pursue a policy that threatens the global hegemony of the USA as the dominant power.

China's expansionary economic policy results directly from the internal demographic situation and unfavorable social trends predicted for the future of this country. I am convinced that the Chinese authorities do not plan a conflict with the United States, but they cannot stop foreign economic expansion. The only way out for the United States is to enter the path of development of the domestic economy and not allow China to overtake it in the development of the economy. The United States has many advantages that, if skillfully used, will allow the United States to develop quickly. It sounds like a paradox, but I recommend the ACD policy advised to Asian countries to America. The basis for it will be the deconcentration of American agricultural property and the development of human capital resources, which will allow for a rapid increase in the competitiveness of American industry. The United States has a developed industry, a banking sector that is under strong government control, an enterprising society and a developed service sector. The burden that prevents the proper development of the US economy is agriculture, which is dominated by huge agricultural latifundia. This causes a decline in domestic demand caused by the concentration of agricultural property and the depopulation (in the farmer layer) of US society. I am convinced, based on years of research, that global food prices will soon rise dramatically and the maneuver of deconcentrating American agriculture will become profitable. This will enable immediate growth of the American economy through the application of the ACD strategy.

I am the only advisor who has enough knowledge to advise and help President Donald Trump.
