Sowing The Seeds Of Peace And Compassion At A Young Age Through Values-Based Education

Mahatma Gandhi, known as the Father of the Nation, was born on 2nd October 1869. A man who dedicated his life to the nation and its people, also taught all the values of peace, truth, and compassion. Mahatma Gandhi also said, “Education is the basic tool for the development of consciousness and the reconstitution of society.” On the occasion of Gandhi Jayanti, here’s mentioning the work and efforts of the e1e1 Foundation, an education NGO that closely resonates with Mahatma Gandhi’s outlook.

As we know, inculcating life values is an essential part of a child’s upbringing and it is best done when children are at a very young and mouldable age. Considering this institution takes in students only at grade 6 is an important factor, allowing children to be more receptive. At this age, children are considered to be easily moulded to any value, concept or idea of the society. Additionally, inculcating such values in children would result in a community filled with wise, compassionate, loving and helpful citizens, thereby bringing a sustainable and lasting change in the society at large.

But thanks to the support I received from e1e1 Foundation, not only could I continue my studies, but it was all free of cost too. In addition, my father got a job in the campus kitchen as a Head Cook and life has never been better than this for us.
