

Feudal, capitalist and communist systems are examples of human barbarism

Feudal, capitalist and communist systems are examples of human barbarism based on the domination of some over others by force of arms, money or terror.

People busy with gaining the means of life agree to the dictates of power, but when life becomes too difficult despite the heroism of the people fighting poverty, they rebel against the power. Regional climate crises have in the past provoked angry reactions of the people against poverty and power - revolutions and wars in their aftermath. Today, when nuclear arsenals threaten to destroy civilization and ideological conflicts do not allow for agreement, we must counteract revolutions and global war in their aftermath. To this end, it is necessary to define the human barbarism that dominates contemporary political systems - feudalism, capitalism and communism. Criticism of the barbarity of these systems based on the domination of some over others will allow us to understand the advantages of the system that I propose in my latest book published in open access on the Internet and entitled:

THE CAUSES AND EFFECTS OF THE EARTH'S CLIMATE CHANGES

A New Look at the Earth's Climate Mechanism and Its Cosmo-Geophysical System

In feudalism, which is present in Asia, a layer of hereditary landlords cruelly exploits the rural poor and creates soulless political systems in their countries.

In capitalism, women use the old mechanisms of inheritance and poisoning the men-fathers, husbands, brothers (men forced to work beyond their strength) to get money, which makes this system of management barbaric.

In communism, men use terror to force people to work in state-owned enterprises created to abolish capitalist principles of inheritance.

In my system, which I described in quite detail in my latest book, there is no violence, exploitation and everyone has a chance for a decent life in exchange for work for themselves and their family (liberated from the old mechanisms of inheritance). I developed this system in the course of 20 years of study during which I understood and used the knowledge and teachings of great legislators from our history: Egyptian sages, Moses, Aeschylus, Socrates, Buddha, Confucius, Lao Tse, Jesus Christ, Muhammad, Marx, John Lenon. My contribution to human natural law is the statement that ethics, or the art of living, has a physical dimension and comes down to saving all energy. That is why I appeal to the elites, not to the masses of the poor people, save what can be saved in our world or the upcoming changes will sweep you into the abyss of non-existence. I urge you to save your energy and save yourselves while there is still time.
